

Table of Contents

Christina L. Gagné and Thomas L. Spalding	2
Processing English compounds: Investigating semantic transparency
Natalia Beliaeva	23
Blends at the intersection of addition and subtraction: Evidence from processing
Marcel Schlechtweg and Holden Härtl	46
Memorization and the morphology-syntax divide: A cross-linguistic investigation
Henryk Kardela	69
Analyzability and institutionalization: Setting parameters in cognitive morphology
Vesna Antoniová	91
Derivational paradigm – Is there any? A contrastive research
Paolo Ramat	106
What's in a word?
Pius ten Hacken and Maria Koliopoulou	122
Adjectival non-heads and the limits of compounding
Luise Kempf	140
Modeling polyfunctional word formation patterns. A Construction Morphology account of adjectival derivation in the history of German
Milada Walková	164
The relation of the head and the modifier in nominal compound names of medicinal herbs
Jurgis Pakerys	177
On the derivational adaptation of borrowings
Lina Inčiuraitė-Noreikienė and Bonifacas Stundžia	189
Searching for competing patterns in morphological derivation: The case of adjective borrowing
Anna Malicka-Kleparska	215
Old Church Slavonic as a language with the middle voice morphology	